BEUING. May 30, (AP): About 1,000 students and workers rallied outside police headquarters today to protest against the reported arrests of leaders of a new independent labour union aligned with the student prodemocracy movement.

Students occupying Tiananmen Square to press their demands for a freer society and less corruption today unveiled a 10-metre (33-foot) statue named "Goddess of Democracy" while thousands of onlookers cheered.

Beijing authorities immediately called for removal of the statue, a replica of the Statue of Liberty in New York harbour, saying the students' action violated a 1981 public order.

"This is China, not the United States," the nation-wide television news quoted an unidentified intellectual as saying. Even in the United States, putting up a statue in front of the Congress building as one pleases is not permitted."

The broadcast also quoted the intellectual as saying the statue should be removed by Thursday, when Children's Day activities are scheduled for Tiananmen. In another development, authorities have started arresting non-student participants in the pro-democracy movement as a crackdown by government conservatives intensified.

Three union officials and 11 leaders of a motorcycle gang that roared through the city in support of the students were reportedly arrested.

About 1,000 students and workers gathered to protest outside police headquarters, near the square. One banner said: "Do not secretly arrest people. Let the people know."

Police invited Western reporters inside the office, where a man who identified himself as chief of Beijing public security told a US television crew that no students had been arrested. He refused to comment on whether workers were detained. The official told the journalists they had violated martial law, imposed May 20, and said the television crew was not allowed to talk to any Chinese people in the central Beijing area under the

Increments virtually non-existent

By Fathima Ahmed Arab Times staff

PRIVATE sector employees in Knwait are victims of an erratic wage structure, according to a limited survey conducted by the Arab Times. Cheap labour with supply far exceeding demand has pushed down salaries since 1983.

Kuwait's Private Sector Labour Law of 1964, defines wages as basic remuneration payable to a labourer during his work, plus any periodical allowance, increment, commission, bonus or gratuity." Most private sector companies abide by a part of the definition and pay only for work done by an employee.

The practice of periodical allowances and increments is virtually non-existent; some employers give increments but pay hikes vary from one person to another, doing the same job in the same company, depending on the whims of an employer and an employee's power of friendly persuasion, it was found. Only some employees manage to get a periodical raise. There are cases of employees who got only a couple of "increments" during 10 years of service; in some cases, they got no pay hike after six years service. Such an attitude discourages employees from working with one

Gorbachev promises to cut defence spending

MOSCOW, May 30, (AP): President Mikhail Gorbachev acknowledged today the Soviet Union spends 77.3 billion roubles ($118 billion) a year on defence — nearly four times the last official figure given.

In announcing the defence total to the Congress of People's Deputies, Gorbachev pledged military spending would be reduced by 10 billion roubles ($15.3 billion) by the end of 1991.

The traditionally secretive Soviet proverness these consequences.

Soviet government has long concealed its true military expen-ditures, complicating East-West negotiations on mutual arms reductions. In October, the official budget for 1989 allocated 20.2 billion roubles ($32 billion) for the military, the same figure used the previous year.

Gorbachev did not say exactly what the 77.3 billion roubles included. Economist Leonid Abalkin, speaking to reporters after Gorbachev's speech, said the figure represented about 9 per cent of the Soviet gross national product, the total value of its annual output of goods and on reforms. He acknowledged deputies' complaints that government ministries "are restructuring very slowly, if at all" and said, "we have to find out what is wrong. Claimed all industrial production "must be reoriented to produce what the people need," a tacit acknowledgement that the primary issue cited by members of the elected parliament is improving the country's standard of living.

Pledged that the Communist Party would be open to dialogue with any social group or organisation favouring reform. The President told the deputies that their members elec-ted to the smaller, full-time legislature, the Supreme Soviet, should "hold the levers of power in their hands" and exercise their authority to oversee governmental operations.

He suggested that the 542 lawmakers create commissions to examine the appointment of government ministers and ambassadors, review all treaties

The Alliance reaffirms its position that for the forseeable future there is no alternative to the Alliance's strategy for the prevention of war, which is a strategy of deterrence based upon an appropriate mix of adequate and effective nuclear and conventional forces which will continue to be kept up to date where necessary. Where nuclear forces are concerned, land-, sea-, and air-based systems, including ground-based missiles, in the present circumstances and as far as can be foreseen

■ The elimination as a matter of high priority of the capability for launching surprise attack and for initiating large-scale offensive action.

51. In keeping with its arms control objectives formulated in Reykjavik in 1987 and reaffirmed in Brussels in 1988, the Alliance states that one of its highest priorities in negotiations with the East is reaching an agreement on conventional force reductions which would achieve the objectives above.

In this spirit, the allies will make every effort, as evidenced by the outcome of the May 1989 summit, to bring negotiations to an early and satisfactory conclusion. The United States has expressed the hope that this could be achieved within six to 12 months. Once implementation of such an agreement is under way, the United States, in consultation with the allies concerned, is prepared to enter into negotiations to achieve a partial reduction of American and Soviet land-based nuclear missiles forces of shorter range to equal and verifiable levels.

52. As regards the sub-strategic nuclear forces of the members of the integrated military structure, their level and characteristics must be such that they can perform their deterrent role in a credible way across the required spectrum of ranges, taking into account the threat — both conventional and nuclear with which the Alliance is faced. The question of Lance will be dealt with in 1992 in the light of overall security developments.

Fatigue, alcohol don't mix

OKLAHOMA CITY, May 30, (UPI): The one for the road could be coffee, but a quick nap might do more good.

Researchers say alcohol intoxication alone is a leading factor in many accidents caused by human error, but a person under the influence of alcohol who also is sleep-deprived may be even more likely to have an accident with catastrophic consequences.

The cost to society in terms of loss of property and life, when individuals are operating either intoxicated or sleep-deprived, is astronomical," said Dr Tom Smith, assistant professor of behavioral sciences at the University of Oklahoma Health Sciences Centre in Oklahoma

Smith is co-investigator in a four-year, $463,000 research project designed to break down into stages the cognitive processes that occur between stimulus and response times in sleepdeprived and/or intoxicated individuals.

In research at the OU Health Sciences Centre, 110 right-handed males are being studied to determine what happens in the mind when information is presented to someone who is intoxicated, tired, or both.

Tests so far have shown that sleep deprivation affects the way information is perceived and evaluated, which could trigger accidents stemming from inac-curate perceptions, Smith said.

Alcohol, by contrast, increases the time required for selecting and carrying out an action.

HOUSTON, May 30, (AP): A 27-year-old woman who spent a record 130 days isolated in a New Mexico cave began undergoing a series of tests yesterday that could yield clues about the medical effects of longterm space flight.

"There is nothing at this point that would make me feel nervous about her health," he said, adding that it is still too early to tell what specific effects the long-term isolation had on her immune system. When we designed the Multipractic with a larger working bowl we, of course, gave it a new powerful motor. But even these two advantages together were not enough for Braun.

We developed a special kneading attachment with a built in gear to tackle this extra weight of dough. It turns slower but has much more power giving a correctly kneaded mix of higher quality.

When you put all of this together with our unique adjustable cutting attachment - that cuts thick or thin slices at the twist of a knob - then you have an unbeatable combination in one machine - The Braun Multipractic.

Iranians offer aid dispute

NICOSIA, May 30. (Agencies): Iran yesterday offered to mediate i dispute between Turkey and Bulgaria over Sofia's treatment of its Turkish minorities, the Islamic Republic News Agency reported. Iran's First Deputy Foreign Minister, Ali Mohammad Besharati, offered Iran's assistance in settling the dispute just before wrapping up his two-day visit to Turkey and heading back to Tehran, IRNA said.

Bulgarian President Todor Zhikvov yesterday, blamed Turkey for growing unrest by ethnic Turks in Bulgaria and urged it to accept Muslims who want to emigrate.

Reports said Bulgarian authorities imposed emergency measures to stifle ethnic Turks who are resisting an assimilation campaign. The President, speaking on television and radio, made no reference to such measures.

But he accused Turkey, as well as Western "circles" and radio stations of an anti-Bulgarian campaign.

He also told Turkish authorities: "Open your frontier to all Bulgarian Muslims who want to go to Turkey for a short-term stay or for permanent

Even before riots mainly in northern Bulgaria a week ago, the Sofia government began deporting ethnic Turks deemed to be troublemakers or otherwise undestrable.

An estimated 300 of them have been forced to flee, mostly to Vienna, Austria, and Belgrade, Yugoslavia. Scores have been picked up by Turkish airliners for resettlement in Turkey. More Turks were arriving in Vienna and Belgrade yesterday, Turkish diplomats said.

Turkish refugee sources in Belgrade said yesterday that the emergency measures in Bulgaria confine ethnic Turks around the Black Sea port of Varna to their homes at nìght.

They also said radio broadcasts from neighbouring Turkey mosques in the area have been closed. Police have forbidden more than two people from walking together in the streets of the largely Turkish-populated towns, they said.

'Stolen' antiquities

INDIANAPOLIS, May 30, (AP): A trial that starts this week pitting an Indianapolis art dealer against the rival Greek and Turkish governments of Cyprus could have repercussions throughout the world for claims to national art treasures.

Art dealer Peg Goldberg is being sued over four sixth-cen-tury mosaics that some call the most important Christian antiquities ever to come on the market. Cypriot authorities claim they were ripped from the walls of a village church.

If US district judge James Noland rules for Goldberg, millions of dollars worth of plundered antiquities could pour into this country, one analyst predic-

"Lawyers for American collectors, both institutional and private, will be watching this for its implications," said Constance Lowenthal, executive director of the International Foundation of Art Research in New York.

"American collections do have many antiquities whose origins are unclear. It's an important case. The stakes are high and the implications could be very

In March, the Republic of Cyprus and the autocephalous Greek Orthodox Church of Cyprus sued Goldberg and her dealership, Goldberg and Feldman Fine Arts of suburban Car-

Cyprus claims the mosaics were taken illegally to Europe from Lythrankomi in 1979. The village is under the control of a breakaway Turkish government that has ruled the northern third of the war-torn island nation since 1974. The self-designated Turkish Republic of Northern Cyprus entered the fray on Wednesday when it filed a request to intervene in the lawsuit and claimed it is the rightful owner of the mosaics. Turkey is the only country that recognises the Turkish occupation state.

Joseph Youssouf, a New Jer-Cyprus, said his client was eager to argue its case in court.

"Who is the Republic of Cyprus, who are the Turkish Cypriots and who owns the mosaics are all interrelated questions," Youssouf said. "There's an awful lot at stake."

The mosaics, analysts say, are among only a relative handful of artworks surviving from the first centuries of Christianity. Fragments of a much larger work at Panagia Kanakaria church, they depict heads of Christ as a boy, the apostles James and Matthew and an archangel. The four pieces are each roughly two feet square (0.2 square metres).

"These mosaics, priceless examples of Byzantine art, are irreplaceable aspects of our country's cultural heritage," said Michael Kyprianou, a deputy state attorney general of Cyprus. Goldberg, 50, who usually deals in 19th and 20th century American and European art, said she knew she was onto something big when she first viewed the mosaics in Geneva, Switzerland, last june.

"I had some suspicions as I looked at them and my heart stopped. I thought they were possibly extraordinarily important, regardless of whatever else was proven in my mind," she said.

"We've been told they would be the most important Christian antiquities ever to come on the market."

Goldberg claims she researched the legal status of the mosaics before purchasing them in July for $1.1 million from Aydin Dikmen, who said she was the former official archaeologist for Turkish Cyprus. She has offered them for sale for $20 million, but they're not on the market pending the outcome of

In one rampage yesterday, set-tlers entered the West Bank village of Kifl Harith near the settlement of Ariel, setting fire to field crops, olive trees and one house. Villagers threw stones, and the Israeli civilians opened fire, killing a 16-year-old girl and wounding two other Palestinians, according to Army and Arab reports.

Her death brought to 18 the number of Arabs killed by Israeli settlers since the Palestinian uprising began nearly 18 months ago. A total of 500 Palestinians have been killed, most of them in clashes with the Army.

Baker hurt Israel: Arens

JERUSALEM, May 30, (AP): Foreign Minister Moshe Arens criticised US Secretary of State James A. Baker today, saying Baker harmed Israel and the peace process when he publicly denounced Israeli policies in the occupied West Bank and Gaza Strip.

Also today, Israeli legislator Yossi Sarid revealed that the PLO has already agreed to elections and passed this on to Washington." Sarid of the left-wing Citizens Rights Movement told parliament.

Arens and Sarid spoke in a stormy parliament debate on a Baker speech last week in which the secretary of state called on Israel to "lay aside once and for all, the unrealistic vision of a greater Israel" that would include the occupied Arens suggested that Baker harmed Israel by breaking a long-standing tradition that the United States and Israel discuss their differences privately.

The image of close relations helps the advancement of peace in the region. It's important that the Arabs under-stand that these are the relations between the United States and Israel. This image is also important for Israel's deterrent power," Arens said.

Referring to media descriptions of Baker's speech as balanced, Arens said: "How can one of our allies take a balanced position between us and our enemies, between us

Fahd supports Lebanon

Israel, Syria urged to withdraw

RIYADH, Saudi Arabia, May 30. (AP): King Fahd in an interview to be published today said Israel should withdrawits forces from Lebanon and indirectly stated that Syria should do the same.

"The final (Arab summit) communique clearly stipulated that Lebanon should be backed internationally to end the Israeli occupation, and the communique also mentioned clearly the summit's support for Lebanon in spreading total sovereignty over its land to safeguard its security and stability with its own forces," said Fahd. The statement was made by the Saudi monarch in an interview in Casablanca, Morocco with Saudi newspaper editors that went with the king to the Arab leaders' summit last week The interview will be published today and an advance copy was made available to the Associated Press.

The reference to Lebanon's "own forces" was an indirect call for Syria to withdraw its 40,000 Syrian troops from Lebanon. The Syrian force was sent there by Arab League mandate in 1976, and Syria balked at all summit proposals to replace the force.

The summit has named Fahd, along with Moroccan King Hassan II and Algerian President Chadli Benjedid to work out a settlement to the 14-year civil war. The panel was given six months to work out a solution after a previous Arab League committee headed by Kuwait failed.

The Syrian forces have been fighting in the latest round of civil war violence, siding with the Muslims against the Christians led by Gen.

Michel Aoun. Aoun said the fight he started March 8 is a "war of liberation" against Syria. Gulf diplomatic sources confirmed a "gentleman's agreement" at the Casablanca 'parley, whereby Syria will as a first stage toward a Lebanese settlement pull out troops from the capital Beirut within three Israel maintains a security enclave in south Lebanon and has been resisting a UN Security Council resolution calling for its liquidation. The same sources, who spoke on condition they not be named, also referred to Fahd's upcoming visit in July to the United States when they expected him to push hard for Washington's backing for the Israeli withdrawal from Lebanon.

The Saudi monarch said the summit produced "positive" outcomes on the issues it tackled, listing Lebanon, the Palestinian problem, the Iraq-Iran situation and the reseating of Egypt on the 22-member Arab League after a 10-year hiatus.

During the 17-month Palestinian uprising or intifada against Israeli rule in the occupied territories, residents of Canada Camp's one-storey concrete houses have smelled the tear-gas and heard shouting as Israel forces tried to quell the protests.

pay their bills, says MEW official

Actual costs much higher

THE Assistant Undersecretary of MEW for consumer affairs Ali Al Finaini has said that the delay in receiving payment for power and water consumption is a serious problem facing the ministry. He added that delay causes confusion in collecting the bills and increases the workload for the next year because old bills will be distributed over the new

There is no reason for delay but consumers are usually not concerned in paying their bills. The ministry does not cut the power from the consumer's house before warning the consumer and calling him to pay the bills. The power is supplied again as soon as the consumer pays his

Finaini pointed out that power bills are estimated on the average of actual consumption of a year before. The total value of the consumption is distributed over ten bills paid in ten months. The office of the ministry is ready to hear any complaint and to examine the meters in houses to make sure of accuracy of the bills, he said. He added that most mistakes in bills are because of wrong reading from meters. He added that the ministry is working to develop a system of issuing power and water bills and to follow them up. There is also a study to use the latest technology in making and collecting these bills, he said.

He pointed out that reducing the tariff of power consumption of chalets from 20 fils a kilowatt to 10 fils increased the number of owners of chalets who submitted applications to supply them with power. He added that people should remember that actual costs of power production are much more than what they pay for. One kilowatt costs the state about 20 fils while the ministry collects 2 fils from the consumers. The production of each 1,000 gallons of water costs about 2,200 fils while the ministry collects 800 fils, he said.

School leavers asked to register for employment

BAHRAIN'S Director of Labour Abdul Rahman Zayani has called upon the island's local school leavers facing problems finding employment to register their names with the Labour Ministry's local employment unit.

According to Zayani a large number of Bohraini students who graduate from schools, universities and other educational institutions will be seeking jobs next month.

The Director of Labour said that registration will enable the ministry to find suitable jobs for the applicants, thereby boosting employment for Bahrainis in the private sector.

Combined efforts by the Directorate of Labour, other departments and committees have enabled the government to reduce the number of unemployed Bahrainis, said Zayani. He further added that the number of registration of Bahrolnis seeking work has dropped from 3,000 last November to about 2,350 at present.

As part of the official policy to promote and increase 'Bahrainisation' the government is committed to encourage young unemployed Bahrainis to seek work in the private sector, thereby reducing dependence on expatriate labour.

Equitable treatment of Kuwaiti investments

Secretary Lord Young has assured Kuwait that closer European economic ties envisaged beginning 1992 will not affect Britain's traditional good. relations with the Gulf.

Addressing newsmen at the British embassy yesterday, Lord Young said the UK wanted to 'assure" Kuwait that it would boost traditional relations.

After 1992, he said, the longstanding ties between the two trading partners would be "a bridge between Gulf states and Ешгоре".

AP reports that a "further closing of EEC ranks could translate into stiffer customs duties or tighter trade barriers for out-siders". Quoting diplomatic sources, it said that Kuwait has possibly more than five billion dollars invested in Britain.

The GCC states have for years been resisting the EEC tariffs on their budding petrochemical industry exports to Western Europe.

Erratic wage structure in private sector

new contract, with a 30 to 50 per cent lower wages. Hundreds of private sector employees accepted because they had no other choice. Reduction of wages on the job is against the labour law, which clearly states that the law has been designed to "protect wages and its non-reduction." Employers had found a convenient way out - first firing and then rehiring the same people on loopholes. There is a no restriction on rehiring the same

Only a handful of reputable companies care for their employees, offering substantial wages and perks. Such companies, during the recession, did not reduce salaries - they cut back staff. Among them were leading business houses and some automobile companies.

In most private companies, qualifications and experience have little bearing on the wages carned by a person. How much a person earns, or can earn, depends on an individual's bargaining and persuasive powers at the time of employment, and whether he or she is in the good books of the employer. Hard work, loyalty and other attributes are demanded of employees, but most employers fail to recognise or even ack-nowledge them through such incentives as a raise or an

Employers prefer to hire an outsider for an upper bracket vacant post rather than promote a senior deserving candidate from among his own staff.

Discrimination

There is a tendency among employers to pay European and American employees more than those from Third World countries, regardless of qualification and experience. To cite a case an Asian earns nearly 108 per cent less on the same job as an European or an American does, with relatively less education and

One case that was particularly interesting was of an Asian who has two post-graduate degrees, with 13 years experience in his field, drawing a salary of KD480 in comparison with his Western boss, who is less qualified and has eight years experience but carns above KD1,000.

Arabs earn higher salaries at any given time. For example, an Arab secretary can command a 30 per cent higher salary than a non-Arab one; a secretary with "native English" qualification commands preferential treatment by virtue of being a "native English" speaker.

Wages are a touchy subject in Kuwait. How much a person earns is a closely guarded secret. However, through a questionnaire distributed to 100 people, one gets a vague, erratic picture of monthly wages. We also interviewed several individuals and employers. One must view the outcome of our survey as a mere guideline of trends rather than a wage structure. No wage structure, in conventional terms, exists in the private sector that gives a clear picture in terms of the lowest and highest paid. As such, there is no basic scale for a given profession.

One can, with some hesitation, say salaries range between a given minimum and maximum.

Typists: KD120 to KD200; Clerks: KD120 to KD250; Secretaries: KD240 to KD350; Teachers: KD100 to KD350; Journalists: KD150 to KD1,000: Electricians: KD70 to KD150; Engineers: KD250 to KD1,500; Computer scientists: KD800 and above; Top management: KD450 to KD2,000 and above.

Interesting factors emerge.
One is a tendency among most employers to extract maximum work for minimum wages; a fac-tory most employers admit "destroys initiative and motivation" among employees. However, not much is done by a majority of companies to provide job satis-

Hotels and banks, which also fall in the private sector, have a fairly defined, relatively better, pyramidical wage structure. The present pay scale (approximate) in the hotel industry is:

Top Management: KD500 and above (maximum not specified); Executives: KD250 to KD500; Middle Management: KD130 to KD250; Supervisors: KD70 to KD130; Rank and File: KD55 to KD70.

Hotel employees also get accommodation, food and at times tips from hotel guests; an annual increment plus an air ticket. The wage of hotel workers, which was substantially higher (exact figures are not divulged by most hotels) five years ago dropped to the present scale to an influx of cheap labour from Third World countries.

Banks refused to divulge their pay structure; but from individual interviews with bank employees, it seems that their pay structure is also organised; with a basic scale as a guideline for payment to new recruits. Bank employees enjoy such perks as annual bonus; air ticket every two years; annual increments, depending on a person's job des-cription in the middle and lower management level and, occasionally, an extra bonus on

A majority of employers pay according to exchange rates. For instance, if a maid is paid KD20, she earns about Rs1,000 in diture of most companies in Kuwait. A reputable company, for example, with a turnover of KD4 million spends about 6 per cent of total revenues on wages, with an average of KD350 per month. This, employers in some reputable companies believe, meets staff expectations. But this is rarely the case. A majority of companies spend only 4 to 2 per cent of their total revenue on

Ethnic tensions in Yugoslavia

Explosion likely

By William Echikson

CAFES selling the local speciality, grilled Turkish sausages called cevapcici, have reopened in Pristina Yugoslavia, Children have returned to school. Albanians and Serbs even have started taking the ritual after-dinner Balkans' stroll, the korzo, walking in groups along Marsala Tita Avenue.

But life is not normal here in the dusty capital of Yugoslavia's Kosovo Province. Antagonism between Serbians and Kosovo's predominant ethnic Albanian population has simmered for decades. It crupted March 23 after Serbian strongman Slobodan Milosevic railroaded through the Kosovo parliament a series of constitutional changes restricting the province's autonomy.

Serbs sang and danced in Belgrade, celebrating their begemony over Kosovo. But thousands of Albanians took to the streets here and in a dozen towns in Kosovo Province. They were met by helmeted riot police, armoured personnel carriers, even Army tanks. The resulting violence was Yugoslavia's worst since World War II.

Explosion

As people begin resuming their lives, this large shadow of repression along with evidence of continuing widespread human-rights abuses lingers. Serb and Albanian alike believe that another explosion is only a matter of time.

The violence already has widened the gap between the country's conservative. Serb-dominated eastern half and its liberal western half consisting of Croatia and Slovenia. After the Serb victory in Kosovo, the Croats and Slovenes fear that the Serbs will try to impose their will on them, too.

In response to the criticisms, Serbs have begun boycotting Slovene goods, complaining that they have been misunderstood. The revolt, Serbs say, was an organized armed uprising, aided and abetted by the Albanian government in Tirane.

"These rioters, they were an organized force trying to destabilize our country," charges Budo Vojuisic, the Serbian president of the Socialist Union of Kosovo. "They had guns; they wanted blood."

Few Albanians, indeed few of Yugoslavia's non-Serbs, believe this explanation. To them, the riots represented an outburst by a population reduced to second-class status with little to lose. Unemployment runs as high as 40 per cent in some parts of the province.

For more than two years, Serbs led by Milosevic have held massive demonstrations to stop alleged persecution of Kosovo's 200,000 Serbian minority by its 1.8 million Albanians. They demanded control over Kosovo's police and judiciary. When the changes actually came, the tinderbox caught fire.

"It was a popular, spontaneous revolt," says Ibrahim Rugova, the Albanian president of the Kosovo Writers' Association. "We've been under intense psychological and physical pressure, without the possibility of holding a rational discussion."

Both Albanian and Serb residents describe the riots as "a civil war." Against rock-hurling youth and unidentified sharpshooters, Army units surrounded towns and MiG fighter jets screamed low overhead. In the scenes reminiscent of the Palestinian intifada, defiant Albanian youth, their faces covered with bandannas, raced through narrow alleys filled with clouds of tear-gas. Automatic weapons clattered.
When it all was over, the official count numbered 24 dead, including two police officers. Witnesses, both Serbian and Albanian, put the total death toll at well over 100. Hundreds more were injured. Milisav Milic, the longtime local Belgrade TV correspondent. "They wanted to avoid being marked as troublemakers."

Under the state of emergency, an armoured personnel carrier still stands guard in front of the Provincial Assembly. Helmeted, machine-gun-armed riot police stop bystanders on their korzo to check their identification and to tell large groups to disperse — it is illegal for more than three people to gather. At around 10 pm, everyone suddenly rushes inside — a curfew remains in effect between 10:30 pm and 5:30 a.m. A nasty, less-visible, pacification process is taking place, with little concern for legal niceties. More than 30 prominent Albanians, including Azem Vlasi, a former party leader with a moderate reputation, are under arrest, charged with fomenting the troubles.

Charges

The authorities also admit detaining 1,023 Albanians on charges of "counterrevolution." They face up to 15 years in prison. Thousands of others — as many as 10,000 — face less severe charges.

Fear reigns. Few Albanians agree to interviews; even fewer allow quotations by name. The explanation is that in schools, factories, and offices, a classic hard-line communist tactic of weeding out "unreliables" has begun. Albanians call this process "differentiation."

"You are investigated, called to a meeting, and questioned about the events," says an Albanian schoolteacher in Podujevo, scene of some of the heaviest rioting. "If you don't answer it was a 'counterrevolution,' you are demoted or you lose your job."

The Socialist Alliance president, Vujisic, defends "differentiation" as a necessary procedure to "fight the enemy."
"We can't reveal all our cards," he says. "We will respond with all possible means to combat these well-organized, dangerous forces." The show of muscle should suffice to pacify Kosovo — for a little while. Albanians see little possibility of making political gains by continuing bloodshed.

Walesa preaches self-help to dismantle Polish communism

By Andrew Tarnowski

LECH WALESA punches the air with both fists. "Get yourself organised," he shouts into the microphone. "Don't just rely on Lech Walesa."

At election rallies across Poland, Solidarity's 45-year-old leader and Nobel Peace Prize winner is preaching a message of self-help to a nation hesitantly emerging from nearly 50 years of authoritarian communist rule.

"Create new businesses. Organise associations and unions to defend them," shouts the man who nine years ago created the first free trade union in the communist world.

'If you want new political parties, first organise associations. "This country must be ours, not the (Communist) Party's, not the security services'.

American hand-wringing over Soviet troop levels. But problems remain because it is still difficult to determine who has

how many troops - and airplanes and artillery - and where they all Even so, Bush won wide allied endorsement at the NATO summit meeting on Monday for his four-part conventional arms reduction

"I congratulate him on this far-sighted step with which he has once more impressively affirmed the United States' leadership," said West German Chancellor Helmut Kohl who has clashed bitterly with the United States on the issue of nuclear arms.

The main thrust of Bush's proposal calls for the 16 NATO allies to speed up the negotiations begun last March with the Soviet-led Warsaw Pact for reductions of conventional, non-nulcear, weapons in Europe. He wants an agreement reached at the East-West talks in Vienna within six to 12 months, and implemented by 1993 at the latest.

This is faster than some of the plan's most enthusiastic supporters Former US arms control director Ralph Earle praised the initiative but called Bush's timetable "overly optimistic." Earle, who negotiated the 1979 Strategic Arms Limitation Treaty with the Soviet Union, predicted the Vienna talks would take at least two years to reach such an For 15 difficult years, East and West debated a cutback of conventional forces in Central Europe and gave up in despair last year — unable to agree mostly on how many troops the Soviets had deployed. Now NATO and the Warsaw Pact are working on a larger canvas the vast expanse of Europe from the Atlantic Ocean to the Ural mountains in the Soviet Union.

Both sides have presented concrete proposals in the last three months, but Bush added troop and airplane cuts to the mix. Bush proposed ceilings of 275,000 each in American and Soviet troop levels without any reference to problems of verification.

In another extraordinary turnabout, the president proposed reductions to ceilings of 5,440 each in combat aircraft and helicopters, which until now were excluded from The Vienna talks at the insistence of some NATO members.

Inclusion of the planes raises a problem for both sides in discerning which aircraft have attack roles and which are designed for defensive

A senior US official, asked about the switch, said: "Look, any time you change a position in a negotiation you're going to be vulnerable to the accusation that the reasons you had for the earlier position are now undercut.

But, he said, the initial resistance to including planes and helicopters came about because the planes were designed to destroy Soviet tanks. However, with Soviet President Mikhail Gorbachev agreeing to accept equal ceilings of 20,000 tanks, the planes' mission was dwindling," he

On the battlefield, government troops from the Muslim north fight rebels in the Christian and Animist south. But the six-year-old conflict has exacted a far greater toll away from the immediate fighting.

It compounded a famine which killed several hundred thousand people in south Sudan last year and has helped to plunge the economy into deep crisis.

Hopes of ending the war rose in March when the government finally adopted a peace pact agreed by the rebels and one of the parties in the ruling coalition.

But, two months later, the two sides appear to be as far apart as ever. Complex Diplomats and Sudanese officials point to a tangle of complex ethnic and religious differences underlying the conflict and a deep sense of mistrust on both sides. The rebels, fighting what they regard as domination by the Muslim north, oppose the imposition of Islamic Sharia law in Sudan. They demand secular laws to put Sudan's many ethnic and religious groups on an equal footing.

Both sides say they want peace. Each accuses the other of failing to reciprocate peace initiatives. The rebels of the Sudan People's Liberation Army (SPLA), which has notched up a string of victories on the battlefield, declared a unilateral one-month ceasefire on May 1.

But Prime Minister Sadeq Al Mahdi said in an interview with Reuters

last week there could be no jointly-agreed ceasefire unless the rebels first agreed to talks on the terms of the truce. He said his two-month-old coalition government was committed to the pursuit of a peaceful settlement, but he added: "If there is no peace, we will close that door and take up defence." This week, a ministerial committee set up in March to handle contacts with the Ethiopian-backed rebels decided not to send any more envoys to SPLA officials. It accused the SPLA of dragging its feet on setting a date for talks to discuss implementing a November 16 accord signed by SPLA chief John Garang and Mohammed Osman Al-Mirghani, leader of the Democratic Unionist Party, a member of the ruling coalition.

Mahdi, in his interview, said the rebels suffered from internal divisions which were often reflected in contradictory pronouncements on peace prospects. Diplomats agreed. They blamed the tribal structure of the SPLA.

which has an estimated 40,000 fighters, and differences over what form a final settlement should take. They said the victories by the rebels, who effectively took control of the area east of the White Nile and south of the river Sobat, strengthened the hand of a faction calling for the secession of south Sudan.

HUNGARY is basking in a season of reforms, drawing comparisons with the Prague spring of 1968 — but the difference lies in a much warmer political climate.

Today, Soviet tanks are leaving here, rather than arriving to cut short an era of reform as happened in Hungary's neighbour Czechoslovakia 21 years ago. Czechoslovakia's reforms were ended by Moscow under Leonid Brezhnev, but the Soviet Union is led now by reformist Mikhail Gorbachev.

"I think we have the same slow-motion revolution as they (the Czechoslovaks) had at that time," top journalist Andras Sugar said after outraging Prague's hardline leadership by interviewing 1968 communist chief Alexander Dubcek for Hungarian

Difference

"With the enormous difference that we now have Gorbachev in Moscow while they had Brezhnev.. Dubcek's short-lived reform movement sought to create 'socialism with a human face.' Without using the same slogan, 1989 reformers in Hungary have the same aim.

'Man is not for socialism, socialism is for man,' Imre Pozsgay, a reformist member of the Politburo, said recently Now in Budapest, as then in Prague, taboos are broken daily as the press sheds long-imposed fetters and looks searchingly at the country's past and its political and economic system.

Dubcek's reform movement was crushed in August 1968 by Warsaw Pact tanks invading to put down what Moscow said was a counter-revolution. Last month, at the height of the Budapest spring, the Soviet Union began withdrawing 450 tanks from Hungary. Hungarian and Soviet officials have pronounced as dead the so-called 'Brezhnev doctrine' of limited sovereignty for Moscow's Warsaw Pact allies.

The Prague spring emerged from a generation conflict within the Czechoslovak Communist Party. Calls from younger, more liberal communists for more open debate within the party escalated to call for sweeping reforms. A party rebellion ended with general secretary Antonin Novomy being replaced by Dubcek in January 1968.

The immediate result was total liberalisation of the media by the official abolition of censorship, the sprouting of independent groups and independent

There were far-reaching plans for economic reforms to release market forces and allow private individuals to set up small businesses. Like most of the reforms, however, they did not have time to get further than the drawing-board.

In Budapest, a similar change in generation has spurred very similar reforms - though they have already gone much further than what was permitted 21 years ago in Prague.

Led since the Hungarian uprising in November 1956 by Janos Kadar, Hungary was already the East bloc's most liberal country when Karoly Grosz, a vigorous pragmatist of Gorbachev's generation, ousted Kadar as party leader in May 1988.

But the advent of Grosz — and especially of reformists like Pozsgay and Rezso Nyers who entered the Politburo at the same time — unleashed a new wave of change making Hungary, according to one diplomat, 'the cutting edge of post commun-

In January, Hungary relaunched its stock exchange, allowing private individuals to invest and speculate in shares for the first time in four decades the right to form political parties.

The same month, party ideology chief Janos Berecz directly compared events in Budapest with the Prague spring when he returned from an official visit to Czechoslovakia. 'Czechosloyak comrades have reflex-like fears of a 1968-type development even today, although we are in the middle of one," he said. In February, the party's central committee gave the green light to restoration of the multi-party system suppressed when the party took power in 1948. Hungary's first multi-party elections since 1947 are due by June 1990. And just as Czechoslovakia in 1968 began

Blacks move into Johannesburg

By William Maclean

A SHIFTING racial mix is slowly changing the character of Johannesburg, South Africa's business and mining capital and the engine room of white power.

The number of black people working and living in Johannesburg, a metropolis built on staggering gold wealth, has risen markedly in recent years, according to residents. City authorities who for decades barred most blacks from living here and strictly controlled the numbers working in the city have over the past few years turned a blind eye to a non-white influx. "All of a sudden the city has an African character," Eric Mafuna, director of the consumer research marketing company, said in a telephone interview. "When whites see large numbers descend on them they feel they want to move out to the suburbs...property is standing vacant," he said.

Some say the mostly-illegal influx, sparked off by a watering down of national restrictions on where non-whites can live and work, will gradually bring a change in attitudes in a society that has been engineered to minimise contact between the races. There is little sign of that happening.

Commentators say more blacks are taking white-collar jobs, but work for most appears overwhelmingly menial.

"It's very black in town now," said 59-year-old carpenter Patrick McCoy. "Everyone (whites) used to shop in the centre. Now they go to

The inner city, by day a car-choked meeting place for all races, becomes a ghost town after dark. Most whites go home to their suburbs. Most blacks go back to overcrowded townships whose population dwarfs the 870,000 population of Johannesburg. Non-whites who have moved into accommodation vacated by whites in the Central Business District, a concrete canyon of mostly ageing office towers, tend to stay home for fear of crime or for lack of money for leisure pursuits. "What we are seeing is urbanisation in an African context," said Mafuna. "There is white flight, but for blacks what is happening is that the city is being given to ordinary people." Police, deployed in force in the townships, rarely patrol the city centre, and whites repeatedly voice fears about black crime. Many use strong language that concedes nothing to international anti-apartheid opinion. "We (whites) are prisoners in our own city," complained a 43-yearold taxi driver of Portuguese descent.

"A black is born in this country every 26 seconds...in 20 years from now where is the food going to come from if they breed like that?" Sue, a 30-year-old coloured (mixed race) executive, carries a pistol in her handbag and avoids walking in the Central Business District where she lives. "You'll find me in my apartment or the basement car park. A few years ago we would go out but now that's impossible," she said. Anxieties about law and order become apparent in the lush suburbs that serve as a kind of sanctuary for wealthy whites, who in Johannesburg are largely of British descent. White Dutch-descended Afrikaners are a minority here.

In outer suburbs with names like Sandringham and Melrose, six feet (two metre) high concrete walls encircle ranch-style houses and rolling lawns lined with trees. Typically a Mercedes or BMW plus a Japanese jeep are parked outside.

One such suburb, Atholl, is five minutes' drive from the battered tin shacks of Alexandra, a Third World black shanty town where children in ragged clothes play in mud alleys.

The contrasts can verge on the surreal. One afternoon earlier this month, white couples in jogging outfits drilled Alsatians and Doberman pinschers on a leafy suburban sports field under instruction from a guard dog trainer. A few streets away, hundreds of black youths paraded to a cemetery for the funeral of murdered human rights campaigner David Webster, a

Benazir opts for austerity in budget

ISLAMABAD. May 30, (Reuter): Pakistan Prime Minister Benazir Bhutto was addressing a symposium in one of Islamabad's smartest hotels last

Yet in her first budget, to be presented to parliament this week, she opts for austerity, following an adjustment programme drawn up by the World Bank and International prepare people for an austerity budget, and then hit them with a much milder one," the diplomat said. "They il do what they have to meet the IMF conditions, but won't go any further.'

Direct flights planned

NICOSIA, Cyprus, May 30, (AP): Iran and Tanzania have agreed to start direct flights between Tehran and Dar Es Salaam, the official Islamic Republic News Agency reported today.

The agency, monitored in Nicosia, said the agreement followed a meeting between visiting Tanzanian Minister of Economic Collaboration, Ameneh Salom Ali, and Iran's acting Minister of Commerce Mojtaba Khosrow-Taj. But the report did not say when the flights would start. The two countries are also studying plans to establish direct shipping lines aimed at boosting joint trade, IRNA reported.

The agency said that lack of direct transportation facilities was a major obstacle in expanding bilateral commercial ties.

Stronger dollar pushes up inflation

Japan to raise rate

TOKYO, May 30, (Reuter): Japan said today it will raise its key interest rate for the first time in more than nine years, but dealers warned it may have to act again soon if it wants to rein in the surging dollar. "It's very hard for the dollar to go down. There is nothing to hurt it at the moment," said Takanori Makita, a currency dealer at the Nippon The dollar barely budged after news that the Bank of Japan will raise its discount rate by three quarters of a percentage point, to 3.25 per cent, The increase in the rate the central bank charges on loans to commercial banks was the first since March 1980.

The dollar has defied heavy selling by major nations and risen sharply in recent weeks as high US interest rates have encouraged investors world-wide to put money into the United States. The currency is trading at around its highest level in more than 18 months against the Japanese yen and in 2-1/2 years against the West German mark. It closed steady here today at 143.10 yen and 2.0095 marks, despite sales of almost $1 billion by the Bank of Japan.

The currency's resilience has prompted speculation that other central banks will follow Japan's move with interest rate actions of their own to stabilise exchange rates.

Some dealers said they expect the West German Bundesbank to raise rates and the US Federal Reserve to ease credit this week in a coordinated effort to curb the dollar's rise.

Major nations have expressed concern that the stronger dollar will block efforts to put world trade back in better balance by making US exports less competitive on world markets.

The stronger dollar and rising oil prices have pushed up inflation in Japan and helped convince the Central Bank that a rate increase was needed to cool off the economy.

JOHANNESBURG, South Africa, May 30, (AP): The gov-ernment is trying extradite seven fugitive South African business executives from Europe and Australia in connection with five separate fraud cases.

Three of the suspects are in Britain, two in Portugal, and one each in Switzerland and Australia, according to the office of the attorney general for Tran-

He was arrested by Swiss police in April at the request of South African authorities, who have linked him to a $20 million fraud case involving South Africa's Trust Bank.

Authorities have begun preliminary efforts to extradite two other men linked to the same case — Hendrik Weilman, who reportedly is in Portugal, and Stuart Pegg, who reportedly is in

Also reportedly in Britain are Oliver Hill, former head of an explosives manufacturing company, whose extradition is sought in connection with an alleged $68 million fraud, and Warren Plummer, former managing director of the AA Mutual Insurance Company who was accused by an inquiry commission of misleading business colleagues prior to the collapse of the company.

Another extradition proceed-

The relentless surge of the Bundesbank would raise key rates later in the week to support dollar and sagging confidence in interest rates at a regular policy a flagging mark. US defends trade policy

Controversial decision

PARIS, May 30, (Reuter): The United States defended its international trade policy today, rebutting mounting criticism of its decision to accuse Japan. India and Brazil of conducting unfair practices.
Chief US trade negotiator Carla Hills said a controversial decision taken last week under the "super-301" provision of the 1988 US trade act was not designed to subvert the existing framework of multilateral trade negotiations. "America is not trying to open markets only for itself, but rather to expand the multilateral trading system." Hills told reporters on the eve of a two-day meeting of the Organisation for Economic Cooperation and Development (OECD). The annual talks of trade and economy ministers from the 24-nation OECD starting tomorrow are taking place in the shadow of a persistently strong dollar and concern interest rate rises in Europe and Japan may not be enough to push it down.

One senior OECD official said it was crucial to restore confidence in international co-operation on monetary and trade matters after apparent disarray in recent weeks over the surge of the dollar. But talk in preparatory meetings today was dominated by last Thursday's decision by Washington to cite Japan — a member of the OECD — and non-members Brazil and India as conducting unfair trading practices.

Four European Community countries, Italy, Greee, Portugal and Spain, were put on a special "watch list" because of US concerns about their handling of so-called intellectual property such as copywrights and patents. Hills, briefing reporters after a first meeting with Japanese Trade Minister Hiroshi Mitsuzuka, defended the right of the United States to use all tools at its disposal to open up world markets to trade.

The super 301 clause of the trade act requires Hills as US Trade Representative to identify countries in which there are barriers to US trade and to carry out bilateral negotiations with the nations named. Failure to reach agreement on removing those barriers could eventually lead to retaliation.

The tatics has sparked strong criticism in Western Europe and Japan, with Mitsuzuka last week flatly rejecting negotiations under the super 301 provision, which he said "could undermine the existing multilateral free trade system."

U.K. STOCKS REMAIN EASIER IN QUIET LATE

EASIER AND NEAR THE DAY'S LOWS, AFTER WALL STREET GAVE UP ITS EARLY MODEST GAINS, DEALERS SAID.

THE MARKET REMAINS NERVOUS OF STERLING'S WEAKNESS RELATIVE TO A STRONG DOLLAR AND INDICATIONS OF A SLOUDOWN IN ECONOMIC ACTIVITY, FOLLOWING THE LATEST CONFEDERATION OF BRITISH INDUSTRY (CBI) SURVEY WHICH SAID THAT TOTAL DEMAND IN U.K. MANUFACTURING INDUSTRY CONTINUES TO BE LESS SUCYANT THAN IN 1988. BY 1448 GMT THE FTSE INDEX WAS 6.9 POINTS DOWN AT 2,133.4,

HAVING TOUCHED A LOW OF 2,129.6 EARLIER. THE POUND CLOSED WITH A NINE BASIS POINT LOSS ON THE DAY TO A TRADE WEIGHTED 92.5, SHOWING RENEWED WEAKNESS AGAINST THAT MARK AS WELL AS A STRONG DOLLAR, WHICH POSTED GAINS DESPITE NEWS OF A WIDELY ANTICIPATED 3/4 POINT RISE IN JAPAN'S DISCOUNT RATE

DEALERS SAID THE MARKET IS CONCERNED THAT STERLING FACES FURTHER DECLINES IF THE WEST GERMAN BUNDESBANK DECIDES TO RAISE ITS INTEREST RATES ON THURSDAY, IN RESPONSE TO CONTINUING DOLLAR

THE KEY THREE MONTH INTERBANK STERLING RATE WAS 3/16 POINT UP AT 14-1/16 14 PCT.

London Gold

LONDON, MAY 30, REUTER - GOLD BULLION TRADING REMAINED DULL THIS AFTERNOON, WITH THE METAL HOLDING IN A MARROW RANGE IN LINE WITH NEW YORK, AND PRICES CLOSED QUIETLY LOWER. SPOT GOLD FINISHED AT 362.50/363.00 DLRS AN OUNCE, THE MIDDLE OF THE DAY'S ONE DLR RANGE. THIS WAS JUST 30 CENTS DOWN FROM THE OPENIN BUT 1.50 DLRS BELOW PRE-WEEKEND LEVELS. DEALERS SAID THE FIRMER DOLLAR WEIGHED ON THE MARKET TODAY CAUSING PRICES TO BE MARKED LOWER FROM THE OUTSET. BUT IN THE ABSENCE OF FRESH INCENTIVES, AND WITH GOLD IN A NEUTRAL TECHNICAL PATTERN, SUBSEQUENT MOVES WERE EXTREMELY LIMITED.

London Money Market

LONDON, MAY 30, REUTER - BRITISH INTEREST RATES CREPT HIGHER THROUGHOUT THE DAY IN A MONEY MARKET MADE NERVOUS BY STERLING'S CONTINUED FALL TO END WITH GAINS OF 3/16 SINCE LAST FRIDAY'S CLOSE, TRADERS SAID.

ALTHOUGH THE BENCHMARK THREE MONTH INTERBANK RATES WAS TRADING AT 14-1/16 14 PGT -- COMFORTABLY REFLECTING BASE RATES OF 14 PCT -- STERLING'S CONTINUED DEPRECIATION IN THE CURRENCY MARKET INCREASED THE LIKELIHOOD OF ANOTHER BASE RATE HIKE, THEY

Wall Street Market Report

NEWYORK, May 30, (Reuter): Wall Street stocks showed little change at midday after an early jump on futures-related buying and a subsequent fall on futures arbitrage selling, traders in New York and Chicago said. They added that the market was confused about the longer term implications of a discount rate increase overnight by the Bank of Japan.

West Germany could raise its rates again this week, dealers said. Concern arose that higher world interest rates could damage economies, Oppenheimer market strategist Michael Metz said. He said the strong dollar raised the threat of further interest rate rise overseas.

Tokyo Stock Market Report

TOKYO STOCKS CLOSE EASIER IN VERY LIGHT TRADE

TOKYO, MAY 30, REUTER - SHARE PRICES CLOSED DOWN IN VERY LIGHT TRADING, WITH INVESTORS GENERALLY SIDELINED WATCHING THE DOLLAR FOR SIGNS THAT IT WILL END ITS CLIMB AGAINST THE YEN. "EVERYONE IS WAITING," SAID AKIHIRO NAIMURA, HEAD OF STOCK INFORMATION FOR OKASAN SECURITIES CO LTD.

"THE FEAR IN THE MARKET IS, WHAT WILL HAPPEN IF THE DOLLAR KEEPS GOING UP?" AN EXPECTED RISE IN JAPAN'S DISCOUNT RATE MAY BOOST THE YEN BUT WILL NOT AFFECT THE STOCK MARKET, HE ADDED.
THE 225-SHARE NIKKEI INDEX SLIPPED 83.94 POINTS, OR 0.25 PCT, TO CLOSE AT 34,076.89 AFTER LOSING 30.79 POINTS ON

TURNOVER WAS A LIGHT 650 MLN YEN SHARES AGAINST 900 MLN ON MONDAY, AND THIS EXAGGERATED SELLING PRESSURE AND CAUSED SOME PRICE SWINGS, ESPECIALLY NEAR THE CLOSE. "THEY'RE TRADING IN A VACUUM SO THINGS MOVE AROUND PRETTY QUICKLY," SAID A BROKER AT A FOREIGN SECURITIES HOUSE. THE MARKET SHADOWED CURRENCY MOVEMENTS MOST OF THE DAY.

THE INDEX WAS DOWN 154.26 POINTS TO 34,006.57 AT MID-MORNING WHEN THE DOLLAR RALLIED TO THE DAY'S PEAK OF 144 YEN, ITS HIGHEST LEVEL HERE SINCE OCTOBER 1987. BUT WHEN THE DOLLAR EASED AFTER INTERMITTENT BANK OF JAPAN INTERVENTION,

SOME AFTERNOON BARGAIN-HUNTING EMERGED, BROKERS SAID. "THIS WAS A DIFFICULT DAY TO COMMENT ON THE MARKET," SAID A BROKER AT A MAJOR JAPANESE SECURITIES HOUSE. THE BANK OF JAPAN BEGAN A SPECIAL POLICY BOARD MEETING AT 3.00 P.M. (0600 GMT). A CENTRAL BANK SPOKESMAN DECLINED

COMMENT, BUT MARKET ANALYSTS EXPECT THE BOARD TO DECIDE TO RAISE THE DISCOUNT RATE BY 0.75 PERCENTAGE POINT TO 3.25 PCT, "THE MARKET WAS STYNIED BECAUSE OF THE LACK OF EFFECT OF (REPORTS OF) A THREE-QUARTER-POINT RISE ON CURRENCY, " SAID A FOREIGN BROKER. "THERE ARE NO LARGE THEMES. PEOPLE ARE

FRUSTRATED AND ILL-AT-EASE."

Hong Kong Market Report

HONG KONG, MAY 30, REUTER - SHARE PRICES ENDED LOWER ON PROFIT-TAKING MIXED WITH MARKET TALK OF RUMOURED PLANS TO USE MILITARY FORCE IN PEKING, AND DENG XIAOPENG'S FAILING HEALTH.
THE HANG SENG INDEX ENDED 39.55 POINTS LOWER AT 2,805.46. NEWS OF PROTESTS IN PEKING AGAINST THE DISAPPEARANCE OF THREE PRO-DEMOCRACY WORKERS SPARKED PESSIHISM ABOUT

DEVELOPMENTS IN CHINA DURING THE AFTERNOON, BROKERS SAID. "AT THE MOMENT, THE MARKET IS TOTALLY DEPENDENT ON NEWS FROM CHINA," A BROKER SAID. "THERE'S NO POINT IN GLESSING WHAT TOMORROW WILL BRING."

QO

NICOSIA, May 30, (Reuter): Saudi riyal deposit rates fell in active one-way trade today as banks lent funds in response to an influx of liquidity in the king-dom and beliefs rates could ease further.

Dealers said kingdom and offshore banks were keen to lend the fixed periods due to perceptions incoming government payments would keep liquidity high and dollar rates would continue to fall, taking riyal deposits down with them.

"People are taking the view that dollar rates will drop so they are trying to lend rivals before this happens," one dealer said. Riyal deposits often closely track dollar interest rates.

Dealers said there were many offers but few bids in the market. as most operators were long on funds.

Rates for the one-month fell to 9-7/16, 5/16 per cent from 9-5/8, 1/2 on Monday. The two-month to one-year maturities all dropped 1/8 point to 9-1/2, 3/8 per Quotes for the spot-next firmed to 9-7/8, 3/8 per cent from 9-1/8, 8-7/8 but this was mainly due to technical factors ahead of the Gulf Friday weekend. One-week slipped to 9-1/4, 8-3/4 per cent from 9-5/8, 1/8.

The spot rival also eased to 3.7505/10 to the dollar from quotes of 3.7504/08.

Meanwhile, Kuwaiti dinar deposit rates firmed in quiet trade today ahead of 120 million dinar ($415 million) issue of 91-day treasury bills. Dealers said banks had bid as high 9-3/4 and 9-1/2 per cent for the bills, to be issued on Wednesday, and were waiting to see what the response would be from the Central Bank.

CHEER PARTY PARES KUWAIT, May 30, (KUNA): Following are the international currency rates as quoted by local banks and announced by the Central Bank of Kuwait, today. ## New trade policy that cuts tariffs unveiled

CARACAS, May 30, (Reuter): President Carlos Andres Perez announced a new trade policy last night that cuts tariffs dramatically in an effort to slash inflation and to make Venezuelan industry more competitive.

"Inefficient companies, oligopolies and the privileged cannot go on being financed by 18 million Venezuelans," Perez, who began a five year term on February 2, said in a televised address.

The measures, part of the government's austerity programme, include reducing tariffs next month to a maximum of 80 per cent for consumer goods and 50 per cent for raw materials. goods used in production processes and capital

The cut in tariffs, which currently range up to several hundred per cent, is likely to increase foreign exports to Venezuela, economic analysts said. Perez said the government aimed to reduce the maximum tariff on all goods to 20 per cent in March, 1993. Companies will have to raise efficiency and product quality to survive and may no longer depend on receiving state sub-sidies that led to the creation of monopolies, he said. Ernesto Navarro, president of Conindustria, a national federation of Venezuelan industrialists, has said the car assembly, engineering, chemical and textile sec-tors would suffer the impact of the measures first. Perez said the government would apply an 80 per cent tariff to car assembly and would allow the import of new cars of the type that were assembled in Venezuela.

Reserves decline as foreign debt rises

Arab aid drops

AMMAN. May 30, (Reuter): Jordan's new Central Bank governor, in his first public statement on the troubled eco-nomy, said yesterday the bank's gold reserves had declined and the kingdom's foreign debt had reached just over $8 billion.

Mohammed Said Al Nablusi told state-run lorden television told state-run Jordan television his main aim was to build up the Central Bank's hard currency reserves and stabilise the dinar's foreign exchange rate. He said the depletion in the gold reserves was caused by a decline in Arab aid promised to Jordan, a drop in remittances by Jordanians working abroad and economic stagnation in Jordan and the region.

"Our gold reserves gradually fell during past years from one million ounces to 740,000 ounces," he said. "Some of the 740,000 ounces were exchanged for foreign currencies, but two thirds of the gold is still within the hands of the Central Bank."

Nablusi also said the bank's hard currency reserves had fallen but did not give any figures. The last official figure put them at $67.7 million last July compared with $312 million a year earlier.

"Our foreign exchange reserves underwent a severe drop regarding what we have now, but we hope they will grow now given the International Monetary Fund (IMF) plan and expected Arab aid," Nabulsi said.

The last official government estimate put Jordan's foreign debt at $6.5 billion, with repayments of just over $1 billion due this year. Bankers say military spending accounts for about half the debt.

He said the basic aim of Jordan's agreement with the IMF on a letter of intent on economic reforms was to allow the country to reschedule most of the debt. The IMF programme is the correct way not only to allow us to reorganise our monetary situation but to harness the process of repaying our debts on time," he said.

The IMF's executive board is due to consider the letter of intent in about six weeks time. If approved, it would enable Jordan to apply to the Paris Club of creditors to reschedule government-guaranteed debt. Nabulsi said a decision on yesterday to repeg the dinar to a basket of foreign currencies tailored to fit Jordan's foreign trade pattern was part of a package to allow the Jordanian

The move, effective today, would give a true reflection of the dinar's value against major foreign currencies, he said. The Central Bank would in future set rates daily.

Aluminium output may treble by 1995

DUBAI, May 30, (Reuter): Aluminium output from Gulf Arab states may treble to over a million tonnes a year by the mid-1990s but industry chiefs in the region believe world demand can absorb this, barring a worldwide recession.

Existing aluminium plants in Bahrain and Dubai both plan to expand output and two big projects in Saudi Arabia and Qatar are at the planning stage.

The aluminium industry is a natural choice for Gulf because energy is the key element in refinery costs. Electricity generated with natural gas is used to smelt alumina ore shipped from Aus-in the past, aluminium has been noted for its boom-bust cycles but regional industry managers pointed to a dead Japanese primary metal industry, and declining US and European industries which should leave room for the Gulf.

"On the whole, there are no grounds for pessimism at the moment, said Dubai Alumin-ium (Dubal) chief executive Ian Livingstone in an interview.

A black spot for Gulf managers is the European Economic Community's (EEC) six per cent tariff on primary aluminium imports. from which European Free Trade Association (EFTA) countries including aluminium competitor Norway are exempt.

They say it is not discriminatory, but effectively it is a dis-criminatory tariff," Livingstone

Argentina sets state of siege

BUENOS AIRES, Argentina, May 30, (AP): Police guarded stores and public buildings in several cities today after looting rampages sparked by a collapsing economy prompted President Raul Alfonsin to declare a nation-wide state of Many groups of looters have been led by women and children, some of whom have been eating in supermarkets before fleeing with food.

At least three people were killed yester-day during looting and riots in the north-ern city of Rosario, the government news agency Telam said.

Police said about 600 people were arrested and 41 — including five policemen — were injured by rubber bullets, tear-gas, stones and fists. Another 300 were arrested in working class suburbs of Buenos Aires.

Alfonsin declared a 30-day state of siege last night. The order suspends civil liberties in an attempt to end a week of unrest by people angered by soaring inflation, rising unemployment, a devalued currency and shrunken wages.

Under the state of siege, police can conduct raids without obtaining warrants and make arrests without specific charges. The decree must be approved by Congress, which was to review it today.

The government "had no alternative than this measure to preserve order and guarantee the property and liberty of citizens," Interior Minister Juan Carlos Alfonsin "had no alternative" than to declare the state of siege, suspending civil liberties in order "to preserve order and guarantee the property and liberty of citizens, and the right to work," Interior Minister Juan Carlos Pugliese said.

Pugliese, who until last week was econminister, blamed the unrest on "ultraleftists... who want to cause anarchy." He contended that the looting was co-ordinated, police radio signals were jammed and pamphlets were distributed encouraging Alfonsin to resign immediately and workers to stage a gen-

But leftist leaders denounced Alfonsin's decision to declare the state of siege a measure that is more comprehensive than a state of emergency -- and blamed the disturbances on the president's failed economic policy.

"The way to calm people down is to grant an immediate salary hike of 100 per cent, index wages weekly, freeze prices and tell businesses and stores - on pain of confiscation — to deliver immediately food and medicine at the frozen prices," said Luis Zamora, a national deputy of the Movement Toward Socialism

Many groups of looters were led by women and children, some of whom ate in the supermarkets before fleeing with food. One government official denounced the presence of women and children as a tactic "to avoid police repression.

The state of siege must be approved by Congress, which was scheduled to meet this afternoon. It empowers police to conduct raids without warrants and make arrests without charges any more specific than suspicion of wrongdoing.

Early this morning, police said they detained three leftist political activists in Rosario and accused them of carrying weapons, distributing pamphlets and inciting violence.

Bid for $6b contract

PARIS, May 30, (Reuter): French construction group Bouygues said vesterday it would head a European consortium in a bid for a $6 billion contract forming part of a massive Libyan irrigation scheme "It's the biggest construction project I have ever seen," company chairman Francis Bouygues told a news conference. He said the consortium would include seven other companies including West German construction firm Billinger und Berger Bau AG. He declined to name the others. "We have had talks with Libyan officials, but this is a long-term effort," Bouvgues said. Libyan leader Muammar Khaddafi has hailed the project to build an 'artificial river" from the edge of the Sahara desert to the parched coastal plains as the eight wonder of the world. The huge engineering scheme is aimed at making Libya, whose population is concentrated on the coast, self-sufficient in fruit, vegetables, wheat and drinking water. A $3.3-billion contract for the first phase, signed in 1983 with the South Korean construction firm Dong A, involved the laying of 1,900 km (1,180 miles) of pipe from wells at Sarir and Tazerbo to the coastal cities of Sirte and Benghazi. Three years later two American companies were forced to pull out of the scheme after former President Ronald Reagan imposed economic sanctions on Libya, accusing it of promoting terrorism.

Food aid 'dangerously short'

ROME, May 30, (AP): The World Food Programme said yesterday it is 417,000 metric tons short of food it needs to cover emergency needs for 1989 and that the shortage could disrupt deliveries to refugees.

*Unless additional resources are forthcoming, the programme may be forced to stop responding to all but the most vital needs. executive director James Ingram said in a report to the agency's governing council.

Meanwhile, the director-general of the UN Food and Agriculture Organisation called for a major re-assessment of how world food aid programmes are conducted.

Edouard Saouma told the World Food Programme's com-mittee on food aid policies and programmes that developing countries should consider giving cash rather than in surplus food commodities. He said that will allow food to be purchased from local markets. He said developing countries were calling for a reassessment of the programme's 15-year-old policies partly because agricul-tural policy reforms and technology have raised the possibility of using locally produced staples as an alternative to imports.

Ingram in his report to the governing body said the shortage of emergency food supplies "could lead to a disruption in deliveries to refugees and an inability to meet unexpected dis-

Ingram said the shortage includes 142,000 tons of food needed for Afghan refugees in Pakistan and Iran and 182,000 tons to cope with African drought and crop failure victims.

Any further examination of the plot is likely to increase the sugar content of this newspaper considerably, but Patrick Glickman gets a call in his fashioable L.A. apartment which tells him that his father is remarrying and that he is to be the best man. Just to complicate matters, his father's intended is the mother of the girl he walked out on to go to California in the first place, and later he discovers that she bore his son and never told him anything about it.

Basically this story is a sort of wishy-

I can forgive a wishy-washy story line. I can forgive actors who resort to gooey expressions instead of acting. and I can forgive the odd total lapse in verisimilitude. I found it hard to forgive the way the viewer is constantly bombarded with technique. Instead of worrying about the acting and overall sincerity of the film director Amin O. Chaudry seems more concerned with what might be labelled 'artistic shots' but which are actually merely outmoded cliches. Most of the technique we are bludegeoned with here would have been more at home in an early Seventies film.

So many things don't add up. So many things don't ring true. Could a man really mistake the voice of a sleepy nine-year-old for that of an adult lover? Patrick Glickman is a thoroughly selfish man if we look at his actions. Somehow in the film he is presented as IDEALLY, pets add something special to the home environment. In theory, they provide loyal companionship without such inconveniences as monopoly of the bathroom, telephone and family car. Unless an owner is silly enough to have a rude parrot, pets don't usually argue or answer back. What's more, because of their acute hearing - and this is a definite plus - pets don't need electronic equipment turned several decibels above safe levels.

Everyone should have a pet to make their lives a little richer but, to survive, every pet needs an adult. Kids cuddle, but parents end up doing all the dirty work. No, I take that back. Pets do dirties; parents have to be there to clean them up.

Despite their impassioned promises, anyone in his/her right mind knows that kids don't look after pets. It's a fact of life that children's boundless energy miraculously dissipates the minute the dog needs walking. A policy of "whoever sees the mess first cleans it up" only results in severe myopia in children ... and unwelcome surprises for mothers and fathers who naively choose to walk in bare feet through formerly safe territory.

With a bit of charitable insight, most parents can understand why kids actively avoid animal exercise programmes and cleanup duties. After all, these demand fairly intense dedication, especially in wet conditions — and this doesn't only refer to the weather.

Less easy to comprehend is the studied aversion that children have towards feeding their pets. Even this chore is left to parents in general and mothers in particular. Feeding pets wouldn't be especially troublesome if it only required the opening of tins, bags or boxes. No doubt a lot of readers are mumbling, "Well, of course that's all that's required. What does this woman think she has to do? Serve up a three-course meal?" Believe me, in our hosue that doesn't seem to be too far-fetched. For some reason or another, fate continually deals us pets who are picky eaters.

I mean, how many people have had hamsters who go on hunger strike until they have their 1/4 ounce of freshly squeezed orange juice in the morning? Or birds that will only eat neatly rolled balls of dry dog food, pounded and mixed with warm milk?

Needless to say, the dog has never been excited about plain old dog food. I could accept it if he liked bird seed, but his sophisticated palate prefers gourmet snacks of succulent meat topped with home-made gravies. We've never had much difficulty feeding fish; they eat each other. As for the desert cat we fostered, you'd think she would be grateful that she didn't have to do her own hunting. No such luck. though. She deigns to eat commercial cat food, but only if it is acceptably flavourful and extremely fresh. In other words, anything that has been open for more than 24 hours falls

The well-meaning friend

tried to intervene but I held

my ground.
"Don't try to tell me that falcons are no trouble. I happen to know they need freshly killed food. I'll walk dogs, housebreak cats, clean fish bowls and bird cages, but I definitely draw the line at strangling mice and quails a couple of times a day just so a bird can eat a warm meal."

After such a near miss, I laid down a new rule: any potential incoming pets have to be warm, snuggly and furry. This soundly eliminates anything with feathers or scales.

'In that case," volunteered our generous friend, "let me give you a Saluki pup."

"You are too kind, but I must refuse. Apart form the fact I would need to get a racing bike in order to keep pace with his exercise needs, the Saluki does not fulfill my final requirement: I have to be able to wear

In the wake of such restrictions, my family has been smart enough not to introduce any new, maintenance-intensive, creatures into the house. On the other hand, no one seems to have got the full message. I'm still waiting for my very own ranch mink or Russian sable "pet" ...

Frederick Forsyth back on the best-seller lists

One-man thriller factory

By Adam Sweeting

LITERARY pretensions are things Frederick Forsyth can afford to live without, though he protests that he isn't as wealthy as people make out "The figures mentioned was it £25 million? — are absolutely farcical. It would be much smarter to knock a nought off. Probably between two and three million. Which is comfortable and nice but it's nothing like the Pearsons or the Cowdrays or James Goldsmith or anything like that. That's very rich indeed.

Forsyth owns just one Jaguar, four suits, and a sheep farm in the Home Counties (he's selling his apartment in Marbella). He uses an electric typewriter and refuses to buy a wordprocessor. He speaks in the clipped sentences and rather plummy tones of the officer class, and no doubt sees life much as they do.

The latest product from this well-drilled operator is The Negotiator a saga of covert skull-duggery, lust for power, and guns. It is distinguishable from its airport bookstore rivals chiefly by the amount of detail Forsyth has managed to cram into it, about everything from phone-tapping to the geography of Cor-

Ever since he began setting records in this genre with The Day Of The Jackal, published in 1971, Forsyth has seen himself as a man with a job rather than a mission. He's no artist, but he gets this done. "I don't think thriller novels really have an effect on people," he muses, slotting another eigarette, Ian Fleming style, into a holder. "They're entertainment. He'll admit that motivation can be hard to come by nowadays. He's already "retired" once, after his third bestseller, The Dogs Of War, 10 years ago. Every now and again, Forsyth tears himself away from domestic equilibrium and turns himself into a thriller factory. It is at times like these that his wife, Carrie, is said to find Freddie unbearable.

He employs a researcher, but he does as

and research he finds pretty easy. Writing, on the other hand, is just the bit you have to do to get your material into book form. Freddie regards people who enjoy writing rather like victims of some unspeakable hereditary ill-

"Let's face it, it's a slog," the author laments. "It's hitting typewriter keys for six or seven hours a day for 45-50 days. There are people apparently who are compulsive writers and are never happier than when they're at the typewriter, but I'm not in that category. A 1,000-word article is one thing. 140,000 words is a lot."

Strangely for a man whose name is synonymous with attention to detail, his early years as a news reporter suggest that Forsyth could become a trifle excitable.

After a stint at the Eastern Daily Press in Norwich, Freddie joined Reuters in London in 1961, and by 1963 he was their man in East

One night, he stumbled across vast columns of Russian tanks and missiles clattering through the streets of East Berlin, and transmitted a panicky invasion alert back to London. Before you could say Doomsday, Prime Minister Alec Douglas-Home and President Johnson were in emergency conference, and NATO was on red alert. Then somebody twigged that the military movements were in fact a rehearsal for the annual May Day

Moment

Forsyth's big moment came with the Biafran war of 1967, which he was sent to cover as the BBC's assistant diplomatic correspondent. He became friendly with the Biafran leader, Colonel Ojukwu, and found that his reporting on the war was upsetting an assortment of top people. Sir David Hunt, the British high commissioner in Lagos, called his reporting "hopelessly biased."

The BBC observed that Freddie's bulletins were "sometimes hysterical, often unrelia-

Forsyth promptly quit the BBC, accepted Ojukwu's offer to return to Biafra, and spent another two years in the thick of fighting. The upshot was a successful Penguin special called The Biafra Story.

"I was one of the few white faces around the place, in the early days," he remembers. Later, the press came in a steadily increasing crescendo, television, radio, papers, America, Britain, then Western Europe and Scandinavia - it was almost coach parties coming, package tours. I was the resident guru."

Forsyth nearly got blown up a couple of times, but it all made matchless raw material for his novels. Mercenaries and arms dealers have become Forsyth staples, and reappear in The Negotiator.

It's part of Forsyth's mystique. He's the man who somehow knows more than the rest, who appears to have privileged access to security information or criminal know-how. And he hasn't even read Spycatcher.

The Negotiator is published by Bantam Press at £12.95.

The bidding: South North Pass 1 🛊 Pass Pass Pass Pass Opening lead: Five of ◊

There are times when, left to his own devices, declarer will have no chance to go wrong. In such cases, the Holy Grail for the defenders is to present him with a losing option.

Note South's two-club rebid. Despite the anemic quality of his suit and the fact that he had enough overall strength for a jump bid in hearts, he lacked a sixth heart, so this was a temporizing bid. When he received a heart preference, he rashly went directly to game—a try of three hearts would have been more prudent.

West led a diamond to East's ace as declarer unblocked the king. The spade shift was taken in the closed hand. Declarer cashed his remaining high spade and took the virtually marked finesse of the ten of diamonds. After discarding a club on the diamond queen, he finessed the jack of hearts unsuccessfully. Prospects for the defense were gloomy. Obviously, East could not have much more in the way of high cards, and the ace of clubs was poorly placed. But West decided that there was a faint hope if his partner held the jack of clubs. He shifted to the seven of that suit. Suddenly, declarer had an alternative play in clubs—he could play West for either the jack or the ace. He elected to play him for the jack and called for a low club from dummy. East raked in an unexpected trick, and his club return allowed West to score the ace for the setting

Declarer should not have gone wrong. If West did indeed have the jack twice guarded, he could have defeated the contract by not playing a club at all! Rather than presume that West was doing something silly, declarer should have credited him with trying to do something clever. Therefore, he should have adopted the same line available to him after the heart finesse failed by playing West for the ace of clubs.

My Secret History, by Paul Theroux (Putnam's, 512 pp., $21.95)

PAUL Theroux, probably best known for his travel books, has obviously drawn on his own life for his latest novel. The first half is worth reading. Andre Parent, the main character, is a writer much like Theroux — several novels, a sprinkling of travel books. Despite a disclaimer by Theroux that the characters are all fictional, Parent's Life parallels the author's: Born in Massachusetts, a-stint in the peace corps in Africa, a job at an overseas university, homes in London and New

My Secret History is, for all practical purposes, parent's sexual history. We get everything from his first girlfriend in Boston to a mid-life affair that nearly ruins his marriage. The story starts off brilliantly.

The first-girlfriend chapter is interesting, the story of a college affair is revealing, the peace corps stuff is extraordinary honest, both about the characters and colonialism. But after that the story bogs down a little. Parent is too empty to be excit-ing, and his endless arguments with his wife eventually become monotonous.

In the end, My Secret History

just runs out of steam. It's a pity, because the first 250 pages could form the basis for, or maybe the bulk of, a terrific novel. Ethan Rarick (UPI)

Mary Davis is longing for a family with the man she still loves, despite the prospect of divorce.

A classic 20th century dilemma

hose embryo is it? Knoxville, Tennessee, decides the fate of Mary and Junior's

By Barbara Jones

SEVEN embryos stored in an American deep freeze are posing a classic 20th century

For the subject of a courte assor the kind the world has never seen. The embryos belong to a tragic couple, Mary and Junior Davis, who after years of trying to have their own baby have decided to divorce. At issue is a decision almost too unbearable to contemplate. Mary Davis wants to keep the embryos so that they may eventually be implanted into her to become her own children.

Junior Davis wants them to stay in storage, maybe never to be given life, and possibly one day smily incinerated.

Theiethical problem for doctors and lawyers in this case is one that no one ever contemplated. whonewe first entered the brages new world of test tube habies so many years ago. Now, because of that technique, we need to consider, as a court must in this case, the most basic question of all: When does life begin?

Are the embryos, conceived out of a living womb, life — and therefore to be preserved at all cost? Or in their frozen state are they just medical debris?

Last week Mrs Davis spoke for the first time about the divorce case which is destined to shock

"I want my babies to survive," she said, "and to love and care for them as a happy family. Junior and I tried for a baby for years and lived through false hopes and terrible disappointments. I suppose it put a strain on our marriage.

It was late last autumn that Mary turned to test tube technology, first pioneered in Britain, and her eggs were suc-cessfully fertilised by her husband's sperm.

But sadly soon after Christmas 30-year-old electronics technician Junior told Mary he wanted a divorce. In the end the nine years of barren frustration hadproved too much of a burden for the marriage to bear.

been created and we had a chance of happiness Junior decided he couldn't take any more," Mary said. "And the first thing he told me was that I could not go ahead and have the embryos implanted

When in August a judge in marriage," she said. "The only things that matter are the embryos that could become my babies."

She says she will fight every court in America for the right to become a mother. Her husband. meanwhile, says he has a right not to become a father.

"I'm going to ask the court to keep our embryos in storage until I can decide what I really want. I, as the father, have rights too."

Doctors can't even tell how long the embryos can be stored. They could be there for 20 years."

Mary has offered to sign away her claim to any maintenance payments, should she have a successful pregnancy, but his lawyers have advised him not to accept.
"I know he couldn't bear to have the embryos destroyed, but he says he also couldn't bear to have his child brought up somewhere without ever seeing it," said Mary. "He is very confused and doesn't really know what he don't seem to have any answers."

Ethics experts all over America are acknowledging that this case must result in a ruling that takes this human dilemma into account. Several will take the witness box at the Davis divorce hearing to help Blount County circuit judge W. Dale Young come to a decision.

Already some have spoken out Lori Andrews, a legal expert on reproductive technologies, said seven American states prohibit research on embryos and this prevents their storage and subsequent legal questions aboutthem. She expects other states to now consider such legislation.

And Dr Arthur Kaplan, director of the Centre for Biomedical Ethics at the University of Minnesota, said the case raised the familiar question of when life begins. "What if we say it is potential life and therefore should not be treated as property?" said Dr Kaplan.

"Even with the custody approach, the question is what greater right does Mrs Davis have than Mr Davis, since this kind of embryo can theoretically be implanted in any woman."

They have only one, vaguely similar, case to refer to. After an Australian couple were killed in a plane crash, legislation there was passed allowing their frozen embryos to be destroyed.

Some clinics enter into a contractual relationship with cou-ples undergoing in-vitro fertilisation, dealing with the disposal of unused eggs. The Davis' doctor did not propose such a contract.
If Judge Young orders my babies to be destroyed, it will be the end of everything for me," said Mary. "Eversince I married, at 19, I wanted to start a family. She had five pregnancies, where the foetus grew in a fallopian tube instead of her uterus, and one ended a life-or-death opera-

"We were both in the US Army, stationed in Germany, at the time," she said. "When we came back to America, we settled in Junior's home town. Knoxville, near his family, and decided to try another way. The doctors said I was young and healthy and an ideal candidate for in-vitro fertilisation."

Six times, she and her husband started the test-tube programme. The regime meant taking fertility drugs, and Mary also had to inject herself daily for 30 days.
"It was hell," she said. "But my husband helped all he could. When things went wrong, we sometimes cried together. He had been brought up in a chil-dren's home and wanted a proper

Junior Davis: opposed to using embryos family as much as I did. He was very supportive."

The couple applied to adopt a baby through the State Department, and three years ago they actually paid a pregnant unmarried girl more than £2,000 for her below. for her baby.

"We went to collect the little girl the day after she was born," said Mary, "but her mother changed her mind at the last minute, and we came home heartbroken again."

By now, their marriage was suffering and there were rows and bickering. "We stayed together, knowing it would be all right if we could just have the children we longed for."

Finally, two of the embryos were implanted in Mary, the rest frozen in case of future need. But at the end of last year the clinic phoned to say tests showed the implantation had not worked. A week later, Junior told his wife he was leaving. He had fallen in love with a neighbour with two small children of her own.

"Now, she lives in my house in the country, her kids running around where mine should be, said Mary.

....This lonely woman knows she may meet someone new and remarry, but she wants to try for a successful pregnancy now with the embryos which already exist. Living alone in her suburban town house, with her two pet cats for company, she feels she has already proved that she would make a devoted mother ... married or not.

Young women missing in filmdom

By Vernon Scott

HOLLYWOOD, (UPI): Young women, once one of the most exciting elements in a motion picture, are almost superfluous in films today. Teen-age girls, yes. Mature actresses in their 30s and 40s, sure. But when was the last time anyone saw a movie -cspecially a drama - centred on a female in Leading men in their 20s abound: Tom Cruise, Tim Hut-ton, Andrew McCarthy, Sean Penn, Emilio Estevez, Rob Lowe, Charles Sheen, Robert

Downey, John Cusack and a dozen others. But they have almost no

Most good young actresses are relegated to playing 'the girl,' a representational female providing so-called love interest or

or called five interest of requisite sex of sect.

One young across who speaks out on the subject is Catherine Mary Stewart 27. She says the feminist movement is partly responsible for the dilemma.

Women often determine which movies will be seen and, clearty, today's women prefer to watch young bunks to youthful women. Beautiful said brainy, Stewart says there is amear-blackout of women in her age group in lead-ing parts. So she reluctantly plays 'the girl.' Her latest decorative job is as the love interest in Weekend at Bernie's, starring Jonathan Silverman and Andrew McCar-

A year after his death, Lisbeth Palme continues in the footsteps of her murdered husband, Swedish Prime Minister Olaf Palme

By Victoria Brittain

ANXIOUS officials pinning up a row of children's drawings from Mozambique showing people lying dead in heaps, women being cut open, small children running off the page, are the hallmarks of any international conference where Mrs Lisbeth Palme is to speak. Behind the ultra-retiring manner of the very unofficial former First Lady of Sweden there is a Mrs Palme officials still jump to please.

The effects of apartheid, particularly on children, are the main theme of all Lisbeth Palme's work and the driving force behind it is, as she puts it herself, the desire to continue her late husband, Olof Palme's work. "It is degrading for all humanity that there is a place in the world where racism is imposed by law and it is a double disaster that we have not only apartheid but also the wars and destabilisation it has brought, as in Mozambique," she says, in words that could have been his.

After his death the former Swedish Prime Minister was awarded the Albert Einstein Peace Prize in the US and the Jawaharlal Nehru Peace Prize in India for his contributions to many international issues. His widow and her family those to highlight one. They gave all the money to South African child victims of apartheid.

Twenty years ago the Palmes met Oliver Tambo, President of the African National Congress. "From then we always thought of him as the real leader of South Africa," she says. And, on the platform of the Harare, conference in 1987 which first highlighted the torture of children by the South African security forces, Tambo put his arms around her and introduced her as "our dear sister, Lisbeth Palme.

Already in the early 1960s the young Swedish couple had come to know Julius Nyerere who, from before Tanzania's independence, was the African voice that Olof Palme believed in, she says, despite the influential voices of the British colonial experts who saw the future very differently.
"My husband always weighed things very carefully and he knew what it meant to support Nyerere."

Shy and so intensely private that she won't. even say how many children she has, Mrs. Palme seems to have to force herself into the public grena. Her reluctance to meet journalists is legendary. However, her own training as a child psychologist fits neatly with her responsibilities as the head of the important. Swedish Committee for UNICEF which raises 10 per cent of the UN body's funds. That background also naturally involves her in the important Scandinavian programmes for the schabilitation of the Mozambican child victims of MNR kidnappings.

Lisbeth Palme: social democrat ideals

For her, solidarity with Africa, which was Olof Paime's hallmark from the early days of his political career, is "part of a general political attitude, part of a person's social responsibility". She finds it hard to admit that in Sweden today as in the rest of Scandinavia the tide has turned somewhat against such solidarity and a younger generation is less interested, less idealistic and deeply affected by some of the failures and disappointments of the post-colonial period. For Lisbeth Palme, the Social Democrat ideals of her husband's party are still very much hers and one can sense they will never change. She starts many of her speeches with the story of a boy who grew up on a rubbish dump, was the only survivor in his povertystricken family and yet grew up to be Sweden's Minister of Finance for 21 years.

"This was when our country changed from a class society to a welfare state; it was all such a short time ago and what it means is that it is possible to change poor countries. In Sweden we used to have 80 per cent of the country producing food and there was not enough, now we have 4 per cent producing food and we have too much."

Much of Mrs Palme's time is spent giving speeches throughout Sweden. Doggedly she will tramp the furthest district and speak to audiences however small. She is a member of the Swedish Peace Forum which works with both the labour movement and the Social Democrat party on peace issues and particularly on anti-nuclear campaigns. We had six years of bourgeois government from 1976 to 1982 which brought us to economic crisis, we have to fight back against a whole trend of thinking. Privatisation is always threatening to encroach, there are always bourgeois communities trying private solutions for such things as child care - these people undermine the communal solutions to problems. But it is Southern Africa that she returns to again even in her discussions of European politics. "I've been inspired by some of the refugee women from Namibia I have met from seeing 25 per cent of children die before the age of five they have managed to cut the infant mortality rate down to 70 in 1,000: women have been educated from scratch in the Swapo camps. These things prove to me how change can come in a short time, much shorter than the whole lifetime it has taken for

Four nations confirm places in Indian tourney

CALCUTTA. New Delhi, May 30, (Reuter): Four assions including India, have confirmed their participation in India's Nehru cate day cricket tournament in the autumn, Indian organiser Jagmoham Dalmiya said today.

He said Pakistan, England and Sri Lanka have confirmed while Australia will decide early new month. The West Indies are trying to rearrange a November 6 match against the rest of the world to allow them to take part.

Former champion lacks aggression

Prost: in action during the Mexican Grand Prix

Having selected the wrong tyre combination for the bumpy, slippery and high-altitude circuit, Prost was further embarrassed by having to make two unscheduled pit stops — the second because of a rare error by his Team manager Ron Dennis admitted: "I don't feel too happy about Alain's fortunes. The original tyre choice is left to the drivers and Ayrton chose to run hard compound tyres on the left and soft ones on the right. "Alain opted for soft tyres all round. He came in to change to hard tyres on the left, but we made a mistake and fitted only one on the front.

"This meant he had to stop again...also, our pit stops were not particularly good and I must say I am rather disappointed with the team's performances."

Such strong words are rare from Dennis who like his team, has grown accustomed to little else but triumph.

In the past, it would have been unthinkable for Prost to be outthought and out-prepared, as well as out-driven, by his teammate in three successive races, but exactly this has happened at the San Marino. Monaco and Mexican Grands Prix.

Becker reaches second round

PARIS, May 30, (AP): Top-seeded Ivan Lendi battled through a one-hour opening set. then blasted Patrick Kuhnen off a dusty centre court 7-6, 6-3, 6-1 on the second day of the French Open today. Lendl, a three-time winner of this clay-court Grand Slam event, had to rally from a 1-3 deficit to take the opening set on a tiebreaker before his powerful groundstrokes overwhelmed his West German opponent, ranked 45th in the world.

"I really didn't know if I'd win the first set," said Lendl, who blew two set points at 5-4, then lost his serve for the second time and needed to break back immediately to level at 6-6 and force the set into a tiebreaker. He won the match on the ace.

"The first round is always difficult to get settled down and not get over-anxious. But I'm feeling really well, mostly because I've had no injuries and have been able to build up over a period of time," the 29-year-old Czechoslovakian said.
